

Biography

Brian Labus is the senior epidemiologist with the Southern Nevada Health District, and is responsible for leading outbreak investigations, directing surveillance activities, and the development of public health informatics projects. He was the lead investigator for the largest outbreak of healthcare-acquired hepatitis C in United States history, and was involved in numerous aspects of the health district's response. He received a Bachelor's degree in biology from Purdue University, a Master's of Public Health in infectious diseases from the School of Public Health at the University of California, Berkeley, and is currently pursuing a PhD in Public Health at the University of Nevada, Las Vegas.